STRATEGIC PLAN 2027-2031

Letter From the Chair of the Library Board of Trustees

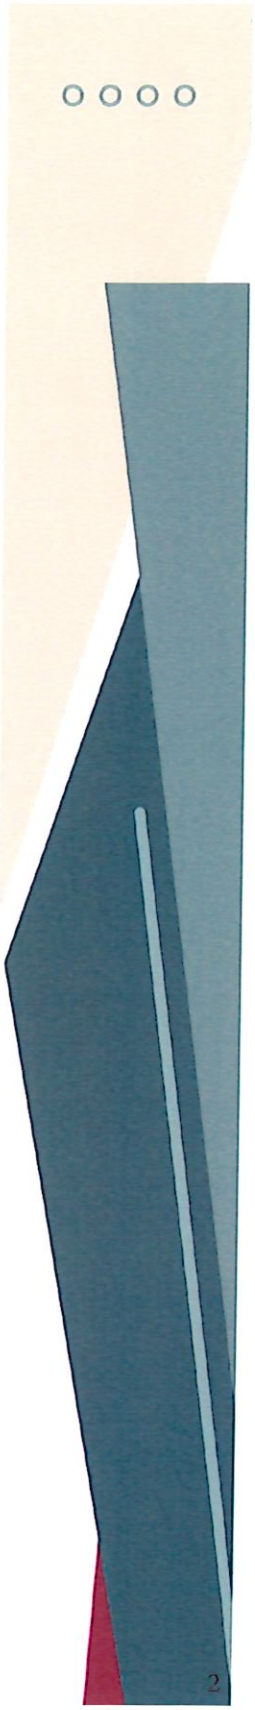

Dear Fellow Simsbury Residents,

I am pleased to share with you the Simsbury Public Library Strategic Plan for 2027 through 2031. Since its establishment, Simsbury Public Library has played an integral and evolving role in the vibrant life and well-being of Simsbury. By updating the Strategic Plan every five years, the Library surveys the needs and desires of residents and reflects these priorities in the goals that guide library services and community engagement.

During the implementation of the previous Strategic Plan, from 2022 to 2026, the Library grew in many key areas with an emphasis on strong community partnerships and responsive outreach. These collaborations have led to many community gatherings, a range of dynamic programming, and intergenerational events. (see Highlights, page 7.)

As we celebrate these achievements, the process to develop the current Strategic Plan has created opportunities for reflection on how to continue moving the Library forward during rapidly changing times. This Plan was developed based on input from you, the residents, the Friends of the Simsbury Public Library, the Library staff, civic organizations, and Town departments and officials.

At the Plan's core were questionnaires available to all Simsbury residents and Library patrons. During several listening sessions at the Library and at other venues in town, residents were invited to engage in conversations and share their aspirations, concerns and ideas about strengthening the community. The feedback we solicited was purposely not focused solely on the Library as a standalone entity but on how the Library can help meet the changing needs of the broader Simsbury community.

The Library, of course, continues to face new challenges. These include changing Town demographics (more older residents and fewer children) and the increasing use of social media and technology by all age groups, sometimes resulting in mental health challenges and loneliness. Simsbury, like most communities in the United States, is also dealing with financial constraints, which impact all Town services, as well as concerns about social cohesion, the lack of civil discourse, and the impact of emerging technologies like artificial intelligence.

Given these challenges, the data we collected from more than 450 respondents reflected a strong desire for the Simsbury Public Library to continue growing and evolving as an inclusive and welcoming community hub of exploration, learning and connection. Many respondents also wanted the Library to serve as a place where different voices can be heard to promote civic dialogue and mutual understanding. This Plan aims to reflect these priorities by combining traditional Library services with innovative systems, events and programming, starting with books and digital reading materials and extending to new, accessible ways to learn and share knowledge and ideas.

The Board of Trustees of the Simsbury Public Library is confident that this Strategic Plan will help Simsbury residents understand where the Library is heading and how it expects to meet its objectives. We remain firmly committed to providing excellent service to our patrons, as well as being a safe, welcoming and inclusive gathering place for community engagement and lifelong learning.

Chair, Simsbury Public Library Board of Trustees

About Our Town

A Brief History

First inhabited by the Massacoe Tribe, the land along the banks of the Farmington River Valley provided rich soil and abundant fish and game for the indigenous people, as well an opportunity for early settlers who migrated to the area's fertile grounds in the mid-seventeenth century.

Founded in 1670, Simsbury's early citizens farmed the land, manufactured explosives, quarried rock, and transported goods along the canal system that ran through the center of town. Their legacy of hard work and neighborly care laid the foundation of our thriving community, strengthened over the years by active self-government, town meetings and civic dialogue.

Welcome to Simsbury

Simsbury is a suburb of Hartford located in Connecticut's scenic Farmington Valley. With a population of approximately 26,000 people, the town is nestled among woodlands, parks, and agricultural land.

In addition to single-family homes, Simsbury's new apartment complexes have provided housing alternatives, welcoming many new neighbors. Yet, Simsbury retains its small-town feel with robust civic engagement through dozens of clubs, service organizations, sports leagues, and houses of worship. The local economy is supported by a dynamic combination of small businesses, retailers, restaurants, and corporations.

A well-educated community that values educational excellence and lifelong learning opportunities, Simsbury residents are proud of their school system. The high school's graduation rate is 97%, and Town schools have consistently ranked in the top ten in the state. Simsbury is also home to several private schools, as well as an active home-school population.

Community members and visitors enjoy the outdoors along the town's hiking and biking trails and the scenic Farmington River. The Town also offers excellent outdoor facilities, including the Simsbury Meadows Performing Arts Center, Simsbury Farms Golf Course and Recreation Complex, many parks, and hiking trails.

Simsbury Public Library has broadened its service to the town since it was founded as the Simsbury Free Library in 1872. With thoughtful growth, the Library has been able to expand its footprint and diversify its resources for patrons, becoming essential to the community as a connector, convener, and center for learning.

After several renovations and expansions, Simsbury Public Library is now a 42,600 square-foot building that serves the public with eight meeting rooms, streaming broadcast capabilities, a thriving Children's Department, a dedicated space for teens, the Business and Career Center, and the Innovators Workshop.

Most of the Library's funding comes from the Town of Simsbury in the form of tax appropriation. Simsbury Public Library also seeks grants, receives bequests and memorial gifts, as well as substantial financial and programming support from the Friends of the Simsbury Public Library.

The Town has invested $1.40 per week per capita for the past three years. The return on that investment is currently $4.68 for every $1.00 spent in the Library.*

Guided by the 2021-2026 Strategic Plan, Simsbury Public Library made significant strides in both in-person and digital access for patrons. Library staff have connected with residents regularly at off-site programs while encouraging patrons to visit the Library for a wide variety of programs, classes and events.

In recent years, digital resources were updated and expanded, so the public could access programs from home. Through these digital capabilities, patrons could remain connected to the world and each other through the Library's services and resources. Both residents and businesses looked to Simsbury Public Library as a trusted source of information.

With excellent public schools, an award-winning Library, outstanding recreation facilities, beautiful open spaces, and a robust business community, the citizens of Simsbury take pride in our history with hope and aspirations for an even brighter future.
